2021 LSU Pediatrics Faculty Wellness Survey Results

Two versions of this year's survey results are available: short version and long version.

Key points:

1. Almost one third of our faculty are demonstrating evidence of burnout in at least one measure.
2. Almost all of our faculty have exceptionally high emotional thriving and emotional resilience (burnout is not because you aren't strong enough-you are really strong).
3. We will continue to work to impact our work environment to make your work lives better. The job is difficult but worth all of our efforts.

4. If you are feeling stressed by your job, please reach out for help. The final slide of each report has the LSU Campus Assistance Program contact information. The Campus Assistance Program is totally confidential and meant to serve as a resource to us in time of need. Based on the survey, a few of our faculty express burnout on almost a daily basis-if that is you-reach out to Campus Assistance.

Thanks to Jerussa Aita-Levy and all of our faculty who think about and lead wellness initiatives on a daily basis. Look out for your colleagues and friends. Reach out for help. Keep making our work place safer and better.

SPR Launches New PROSPER Diversity Award PRomotion of FellOWs' PEdiatric Research

The Society of Pediatric Research has announced a new $7,500 SPR PROSPER Diversity Award to advance their mission of creating a multi-disciplinary network of diverse researchers to improve child health. In 2021 one award will be made to an under-represented in medicine fellow pursuing a pediatric research career path. Award funds will be matched by the Awardee's organization, yielding a total of $15,000 in research support.

In addition to this financial support SPR will provide the SPR PROSPER Diversity Awardee with mentoring over the course of a twelve-month pediatric research project. This dual-support approach is intended to facilitate a pediatric academic research-focused career trajectory for fellows from under-represented in medicine background(s) and to increase the diversity of the pediatric researcher workforce. More information about the SPR PROSPER Diversity Award is available on the SPR website.
